Celebrate 50 years of the Red Sox's 'Impossible Dream' season

The event will also honor Boston sports icon Tony Conigliaro.

MATT JUUL

These days, Red Sox Nation is used to playoff runs and World Series wins. But that wasn't always the case.

This year marks the 50th anniversary of the team's remarkable "Impossible Dream," which saw Boston come back to win the American League pennant in the very last game of 1967 season.

While the Red Sox ended up losing to the Cardinals in the World Series, it was a helluva run for the squad, which put together its first winning season since 1958 that year and also made it to the championship for the first time since 1946.

In honor of the unforgettable season, the family of Boston sports icon Tony Conigliaro, the Red Sox and the Farrelly Brothers are teaming up to host a celebration at Tony C's Sports Bar & Grill on Thursday night.

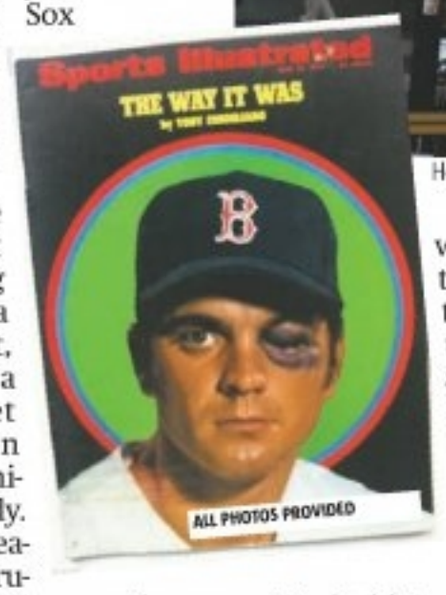
The evening will include a comedy show headlined by Steve Sweeney and Lenny Clarke, music by blues artist James Montgomery, as well as a VIP reception with several local stars and Red Sox legends like Rico Petrocelli, Luis Tiant and Bill "Spaceman" Lee.

"People that go to this thing are going to be shocked," says Richie Conigliaro, brother of the late Tony C. "I know there's people that are going to show up there that I don't even expect and I'm going to be in awe of them."

Richie adds that a few players in pinstripes are also expected to attend when the Yankees come to town for a weekend series at Fenway Park.

"I'm working on getting a few Yankees there," he says. "I know some Red Sox fans won't like it, but it will make it interesting."

Head to Tony C's for the big celebration on Aug. 18.



While the event is shaping up to be a fun night, it will be a bittersweet celebration for the Conigliaro family. The 1967 season was brutal for Tony C, who was hit by a pitch on Aug. 18 at Fenway Park, fracturing his cheekbone, dislocating his jaw and injuring his left retina. The Massachusetts native was forced to sit out the rest of the year and was never the same player following the event.

"It is bittersweet because he was only 22," Richie says. "He never got to play in a playoff game, never mind the World Series. But what's meant to be is meant to be."

Although Tony C's career was cut short, he racked up many accolades in his short baseball career. He was selected to play in the 1967 All-Star Game months before the infamous beaning, and earned Comeback Player of the Year honors 18 months later with an incredible 20 homers and 82 RBI in just 141 games.

The Red Sox Hall of Fame member continues to inspire fans with his amazing legacy. The team will honor Tony C with a permanent memorial at Fenway Park, which will be unveiled before Friday's game. Richie and his brother Billy will be there to throw out the first pitch.

The Conigliaro's are pleasantly surprised by how much love fans still have for Tony C.

"You have no idea how many speeding tickets his name saved me," Richie jokes. "Everybody remembers his name. He made such an impact, that it still lasts."

Dance away the summer at the Fort Point Festival

Party on the Point this weekend.
HENRY JANI

The Fort Point Festival is back for its second year. ISTOCK

The Fort Point Festival will assemble some of the city's best food, drinks and music for a late-summer celebration this weekend.

Spanning across Thompson Place and Stillings St., the festival will be separated into several themed sections. Start off by satiating that appetite at the "eat" restaurant tasting, ticketed at $30 online and $35 at the door, where you can experience signature dishes from more than a dozen local restaurants.

The award-winning Menton will bring truffled provencal tartlets from its kitchen right in Fort Point. Seafood specialists Row 34 has planned a fluke ceviche planned for the event. Also check out Sportello, another Barbara Lynch establishment in Fort Point, where you can cool down with its chilled cantaloupe soup.

Libation options include Drink's celery scrub soda as well as a myriad of hoppy beverages available at the Trillium Beer Garden. And don't worry dessert lovers, as confections include Flour Bakery's mini oatmeal cream pies while Pastoral will whip up shaved Italian lemon ice.

But what about those still working on their summer beach body? The Fort Point Festival has got you covered with yoga by the Monica Method. Join her and fellow yogis at the "play" section starting at 12:15 p.m. Speed things up afterward by watching a stellar dance performance by Urbanity Dance at the Residence Inn Downtown Seaport.

Dance a bit yourself, too, as a six-piece Prince tribute band named LoVeSeXy will play some of the late musician's best songs. More ambient musical stylings are planned with John Cremona at the Stillings St. "listen" stage.

Photobooths, travelling telescopes from #popscope and cornhole are just a few more happenings at this jam-packed event. And don't forget fun for the kids with the Boston Fire Museum's touch-a-truck and the Kids Jam Dance Party.

5 Walking Dead' stars to meet at Walker Stalker Con

See your favorite characters from the hit AMC series. HENRY JANI

Sure to attract biters and breathers alike, Walker Stalker Con returns to the Hub at the Westin Boston Waterfront on Aug. 19 and 20.

The two-day event will feature panels and photo ops with "The Walking Dead" characters past and present, exhibitors of all kinds and a "zombie bash" after party that will run into the wee hours of the night. Other stars like Bruce Campbell and Ted Raimi from "Ash vs. Evil Dead" are also joining in on the fun as well as former cast members including Scott Wilson and Michael Cudlitz.

But as numbers keep dwindling down, we decided to compile a list of characters in attendance who haven't quite yet been zombified. Thankfully, you won't have to play "eeny, meeny, miny, moe" this time to decide on who to see.

Chandler Riggs, "Carl Grimes"
Get a chance to ask Carl what season eight holds in store for him and Enid romantically. The hard-edged son of Rick Grimes, growing up right in front of the audience's eyes, will be at Walker Stalker on both Saturday and Sunday with his fellow castmates. Luckily, Negan won't be around this time.

Lennie James, "Morgan Jones"
Now in his third season as a full-time character in the show, the pacifist and aikido master Morgan will also be joined by fellow Kingdom member Ezekiel at the convention. Pose with him, and hopefully his iconic staff, at the photo op at 2 p.m. on Saturday and 11 a.m. on Sunday.

Bow to King Ezekiel.

Khary Payton, "Ezekiel"
All hail the king, and his pet tiger, Shiva. Here's a chance to listen to Payton's feelings on being upgraded to a full guest starring role in the upcoming season eight after being introduced to audiences as the leader of the Kingdom sanctuary. Fingers crossed the giant feline also shows up.

Christian Serratos, "Rosita"
This gutsy, courageous female fighter will appear at the convention alongside her pal Tara Chambler, played by Alanna Masterson. Both of them will be available for photos around noon on Saturday and 11 a.m. on Sunday.

Seth Gilliam, "Gabriel Stokes"

If you go

Aug. 19-20, Westin Boston Waterfront, 425 Summer St., $45+, walkerstalkercon.com

Thankfully, Father Gabriel reminds us that all religious people post-apocalypse aren't pesky Fundies. His new role as the voice of morality for Rick and company should continue to grow as he becomes a main cast member in season eight. Catch him for a group photo, along with Cooper Andrews (Jerry) and Karl Makinen (Richard), at 3 p.m. on Saturday and 1:30 p.m.

Jeff Bridges on Tom Brady and the zen of SoulCycle

Callum Turner and Jeff Bridges in "The Only Living Boy in New York." NIKO TAVERNISE / AMAZON STUDIOS / ROADSIDE ATTRACTIONS

"The Dude" gets philosophical while talking about his new flick.

MATT JUUL

If you thought your family was dysfunctional, wait until you meet the characters of Jeff Bridges' new drama "The Only Living Boy in New York."

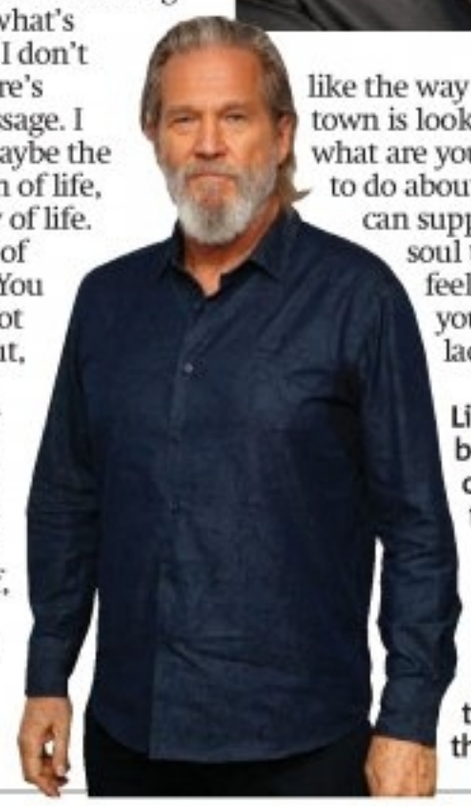
The film, which opens in Boston this weekend, centers around a college grad named Thomas (Callum Turner) who discovers that his father, a successful publisher played by Pierce Brosnan, is cheating on his mother with a younger woman (Kate Beckinsale). Things get complicated as Thomas tries to break up his dad's affair by sleeping with his mistress.

We chatted with the Bridges about the film, and the Oscar winner didn't hesitate to break out his "Dude" side for a very zen conversation.

Having lived in New York, do you agree with the assessment made by Callum Turner's character, that New York has lost its soul to the rise of Starbucks and SoulCycle?
What is that term you used, SoulCycle? What is that, a cycling place?

Yeah, it's a popular cycling gym.
Souls and other things go through cycles. This is just another cycle that will spawn a more creative, artistic one. But us human beings, we don't like change. We resist it — I know I do. We get nostalgic for things. But it ain't what it used to be.

What's the film's message then? Is it better to go with the flow?
We're part of the flow as well. We have something to do with what's happening. I don't know if there's really a message. I think it's maybe the appreciation of life, the mystery of life. That's kind of how life is. You think you got it figured out, but it's got many other layers to it. And just to be sensitive to that and ask yourself, "What's your role in the way it all flows?" You don't like the way your town is looking, what are you going to do about? You can supply the soul that you feel that your city is lacking.



Lies are a big part of the film. Considering how lying seems to be the norm in today's politics, does the truth even mean anything anymore?
What comes to mind as you ask that question, lies imply the truth, and the truth, as far as I can tell, is such a subjective kind of thing. Our goals for telling our version of the truth and why we lie, sometimes we'll think our lying is for the common good — and often it can be. You can tell an ethical lie, if that's such a thing. I suppose there's such an animal. Also what comes to mind, considering how much we do lie and how fallible a species we are, the word grace comes to mind. I'm not a particularly religious guy, but there must be some grace going down that's allowed us to hang out on the planet as long as we have.

Since Tom Brady's birthday was this month and you worked with him on an Uggs ad campaign, what did you think of his acting abilities? Does he have a future in the business?
Yeah he could do it. We had fun doing our little scene together. Happy birthday Tom!

Turn back time at Swingin' on the Charles

Get your jitterbug and jive going at Swingin' on the Charles this Saturday.

Hosted by Community Boating Inc. and Boston Swing Central, this event welcomes professionals and novices alike to turn back the clock and enjoy an evening of good ol' fashioned dancing. Starting just as the sun goes down, a one-hour lesson will be offered to prepare those who are new or haven't exactly "swung" in a while.

Vice President of Boston Swing Central Michael Hibarger says that "there was easily 100 people at the lesson last year, it was pretty packed." And don't fret about the dancing partner situation as none are necessary to join the practice.

Swing, which is actually made up of a group of several dances, has basics which can "be easy to learn in an hour" according to Hibarger. East Coast Swing is taught in the beginner's lesson at a six-count beat, but Lindy hop is the usual go-to dance for Boston Swing Central. "It's a fully American swing dance that incorporates several other dances like the Charleston and foxtrot," explains Hibarger, who plans on "round-robining with others" through classics like "Sittin' on the Dock of the Bay" by soul-singing legend Otis Redding.

"Swingin' on the Charles is a really great night to be on the water," he adds. "It's very fun for us as we can let loose a bit from our normal structures." HENRY JANI

Expect bumping tunes throughout the midnight hours when Boston-born DJ and producer Clinton Sparks teams up with Nelly for a one-night show this weekend.

The duo is taking over Foxwoods Resort Casino for the latest installment of the "Get Familiar Fridays" series at the Shrine Kitchen, Lounge & Nightclub. Sparks tells Metro that he goes way back with the hip-hop star.

"I've known Nelly for many years," Sparks says. The pair has worked together on several albums over the years, which is why the DJ knows that this weekend's show in New England will be "a whole lot of awesome" with his good friend.

While the lineup will be flexible, fan favorites like "Hot in Herre" will probably be worked into the mix alongside newer selections from both parties. "I usually get artists to do things they usually wouldn't," says Sparks.

The Dorchester native believes much of his success, musical style and attitude has been influenced by his childhood in Boston. Sparks explains that "you can hear the emotion and pain in my music, it comes from my upbringing. But I also made it in this industry because of my relentless Boston mentality."

Aside from energizing crowds with his tunes, Sparks has worked with stars like Akon, Ludacris and, most notably, Lady Gaga.

"I didn't actually spend much time with Gaga, but I worked with two other DJ's to help create her album 'Born this Way,'" he says. It was this work that lead to his 2012 Grammy nomination for Album of the Year.

And while Connecticut is not quite home, Sparks is looking forward to sipping a Dunkin' Donuts iced tea during his visit to the East Coast.

Organizer of Boston Free Speech rally says event will go on

John Medlar of the Boston Free Speech group said that the rally will take place this weekend and that it is not associated with white supremacy. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

Organizers of the free speech rally set for Boston Common this weekend said that the event will go on, despite controversy.

John Medlar, an organizer for the event with Boston Free Speech, also called the Boston Free Speech Coalition, said that the group has been told they will get their permit to gather on Boston Common this Saturday, Aug. 19. The Boston Parks Department issued a permit to the coalition on Wednesday.

Medlar, a 23-year-old student at Fitchburg State University, described the group as a grassroots collective of young citizens "concerned about the political violence that has arisen in this country."

"We want to promote good arguments from both the left and right," he said. "We want to promote people getting together around the shared constitutional values that form the basis of our society."

Medlar met with the Boston Police Department on Wednesday to discuss details for the rally, which has quickly garnered controversy following the Unite the Right rally in Charlottesville, Virginia, last weekend.

The group maintained that it is not associated with the event in Charlottesville and that this rally is not intended to promote white supremacy.

"The point of rally is to promote speaking and listening to each other as an alternative to violence," Medlar said. "We're not trying to spread hate — quite the opposite. We are trying to de-radicalize the fringes."

A Boston PD spokesperson confirmed that officers met with an event organizer on Wednesday, adding that, "the department will be prepared to provide appropriate coverage to ensure for the safety of all."

Medlar said that he was told BPD will provide physical barriers to separate protesters from counterprotesters, that the department has an emergency evacuation plan "if anything goes terribly wrong" and that officers will be searching bags to ensure that no one brings weapons of any sort.

That includes sticks and flagpoles, he said, though he added that people could still bring flags.

"Make no mistake: we do not welcome any hate groups to Boston and we reject their message," Mayor Marty Walsh said in a statement. "We have made it clear that we will not tolerate incitements to violence or any threatening behavior."

When asked if he knows of any attendees planning on bringing Nazi or Confederate flags, Medlar said "that is going counter to our message that our group is attempting to promote."

Multiple controversial speakers initially listed on a poster promoting the rally have since dropped out of the event. Gavin McInnes, co-founder of Vice Media and founder of a far-right men's organization called Proud Boys, said on his Twitter that he would not be attending. Despite a post from the Boston Free Speech Facebook account saying that Baked Alaska is attending, Medlar said that he is not.

"I think that one of our people tried to invite Baked Alaska without consulting us — that was a mistake," he said.

Still, Medlar confirmed that other controversial speakers were invited, like Augustus Invictus, who attended the Charlottesville rally and reportedly has proclaimed himself a god who kills goats and drinks their blood, according to the Southern Poverty Law Center.

"The point of rally is to promote speaking and listening to each other as an alternative to violence." John Medlar

Right-wing BU teen won't return to Boston after attending Charlottesville rally

Nicholas Fuentes, who hosts a web show called "America First," said that he will not return to Boston University this fall. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

A Boston University student said that he would not return to the school following threats he received for attending the Unite the Right rally that turned violent this past weekend in Charlottesville, Virginia.

Nicholas Fuentes, 18, has been outspoken about his controversial conservative political views in the past, including supporting President Donald Trump and hosting an online broadcast show on the Right Side Broadcasting Network called "America First."

He gained attention following a tweet in which he wrote, "Multiculturalism is cancer."

Fuentes was featured in a Boston Globe story from March headlined "The kids are far right," which profiled "conservative rabble-rousers."

Fuentes, who recently finished his freshman year at BU, attended the events in Charlottesville, writing on his Facebook, "Wow — what an incredible rally here."

"We took mace, pepper spray, feces — they sent in the National Guard, counterprotesters, and had the governor declare a state of emergency — all to silence us," he wrote in a post on Aug. 12. "You can call us racists, white supremacists, Nazis, & bigots. You can disavow us on social media from your cushy Campus Reform job. But you will not replace us."

> "It was dangerous for me to wear my MAGA hat in public, to be recognized in public, so I started to think about going somewhere safer."
> Nicholas Fuentes

Since attending the rally, Fuentes said that he has received between 10 and 20 death threats through email and social media.

"We were there to demonstrate against the replacement of the native populations of the west, particularly Europe and the U.S., of foreign peoples," he said of why he went to Charlottesville from his native Chicago.

When asked if others may perceive that move as a threat, he said, "I don't see how me traveling to a rally and attending a political event would be a threat against someone."

"Especially when people are actually sending me explicit verbal threats against my life in great detail," he added.

The recent threats have spurred his decision to leave the Boston school — where he was studying international relations and political science — but it's not the first time he thought about leaving.

"I actually had been considering leaving BU really at the beginning of my second semester, after the inauguration of the president," he said. "It was dangerous for me to wear my 'Make America Great Again' hat in public, to be recognized in public, so I started to think about going somewhere safer."

Safer as in not such a "liberal," blue-leaning area, he specified. Boston University confirmed to Metro that Fuentes is no longer enrolled at the school.

Fuentes said he would take the fall semester off and will probably attend Auburn University in Alabama in the spring.

"It's funny because so many people are celebrating this, saying, 'You're not welcome,' 'Don't let the door hit you on the way out,'" he said. His response? "You can have your city."

Comm Ave. open to cars, T commuters after weeks of construction

Major work on the Commonwealth Avenue Bridge Project is complete, opening the road to vehicles and the Green Line B Branch trolleys.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

The Mass Pike passes under Comm Ave., where a new bridge has recently been completed. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

For commuters who rely on Comm Ave., you're now able to travel over the main road again after three weeks of construction work.

The Massachusetts Department of Transportation's major work on the Commonwealth Avenue Bridge is completed, and as of Wednesday morning, the Green Line B Branch is once again up and running along the road.

Crews tested the new MBTA track infrastructure overnight on Tuesday, according to MassDOT, ahead of normal trolley service resuming Wednesday morning.

Workers also painted travel lines on the eastbound bridge deck overnight and removed heavy equipment to allow private vehicles to once again drive over the bridge.

There's still some minor work to complete, though. Crews need to finish the final paving work, install curbing and sidewalk and wrap up utility work.

These tasks are expected to take place throughout the coming weeks, the department said, and "are not expected to significantly impact vehicular traffic or the local community."

MassDOT will place temporary pavement markings, delineated bicycle lanes and detours for pedestrians around that work.

Drivers will also see temporary lane reductions during off-peak traffic hours on both Commonwealth Avenue and the Massachusetts Turnpike in the areas near the bridge.

Transportation Secretary Stephanie Pollack and MBTA Deputy General Manager Jeff Gonneville thanked the public for their patience during the construction, as well as crews for their "round-the-clock work."

Ahead of the project's start, MassDOT warned commuters that construction would cause a "hellish three weeks." The intense delays were necessary, officials said, because workers used an "accelerated bridge technique" that is more disruptive to traffic at the time, but shortens the project's overall length.

With normal techniques, the complete Commonwealth Avenue Bridge construction would have taken about five years, officials said.

Commonwealth Avenue's reopening is a "milestone," MassDOT said, representing intensive construction in which crews replaced the eastbound side of the bridge in approximately three weeks. The westbound side of the bridge will be replaced in a similar manner next summer.

AMAZON IN BOSTON

Amazon pickup location coming to Comm Ave

If you don't want to send packages to your Boston apartment, but you can't quit Amazon, don't worry — the online retail giant has another option coming for you.

A fully-staffed Amazon pickup location is coming to 870 Commonwealth Ave., an Amazon representative confirmed.

Elements Massage, also at 870 Commonwealth Ave., is downstairs, an employee said, with the Amazon store upstairs.

This isn't Amazon's first foray into this idea of a separate shipping location other than your home address. Amazon Lockers have been appearing around the country, usually in already-established businesses like convenience stores and supermarkets.

An Amazon Locker serves as a shipping location if you don't want to send something right to your home. Once delivered, you get a notification with a pickup code for your specific locker.

The Amazon pickup location coming to Comm Ave. will "offer the community a convenient way to pick up and return Amazon orders, including virtually everything one needs – from everyday essentials to technology," spokeswoman Carly Golden said in an email.

All Amazon customers can ship their orders to a pickup location, and Prime members receive free same-day and one-day delivery on millions of items, she explained. "Plus, returns are always free."

That update is not the only reason Amazon has once again made headlines. On Wednesday, President Trump took to Twitter to blast the company.

"Amazon is doing great damage to tax paying retailers," he wrote. "Towns, cities and states throughout the U.S. are being hurt — many jobs being lost!"

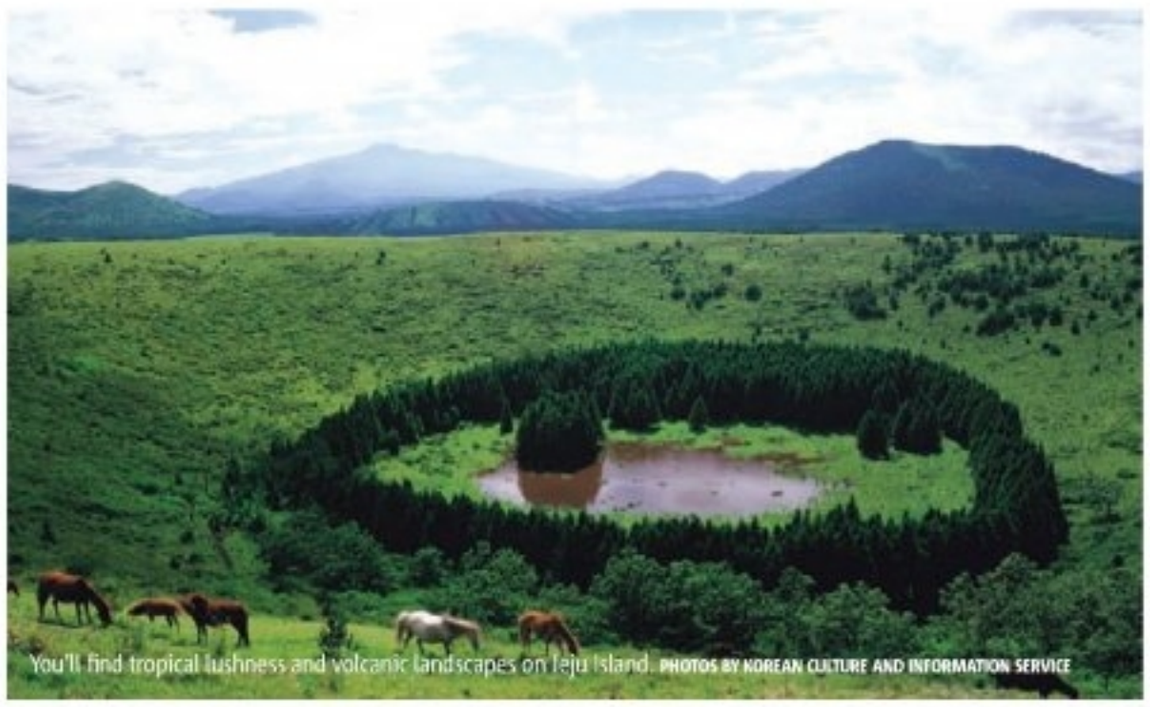
The tropical island you never knew existed

Jeju Island is a trove of cultural and natural wonder that's nearly off the radar.

Fodor's Travel



You'll find tropical lushness and volcanic landscapes on Jeju Island. PHOTOS BY KOREAN CULTURE AND INFORMATION SERVICE

Created by volcanic eruptions more than two million years ago, Jeju Island, the Unesco World Heritage Site has been likened to the "Hawaii of South Korea" thanks to its black sand beaches, tropical climate, dramatic cliffs and amazing lava tubes. And because of its beautiful natural landscape and 360 volcanoes dotted about the island, Jeju was named one of the New 7 Wonders of Nature. Here's an action-packed guide to help you make the most of the island's natural beauty.

Climb Mount Halla

Jeju is home to the tallest mountain in South Korea, Mount Halla (Hallasan), at 6,397 feet. But the trek up Hallasan is considered one of the most rewarding experiences on the island, thanks to the pristine woodlands, mountain streams, abundant wildlife, waterfalls and views of the amazing Baengnokdam crater. The hike takes roughly eight to 10 hours roundtrip and is best enjoyed during the spring.

Go Spelunking in a Lava Tube

Formed from volcanic explosions 100,000 to 300,000 years ago, the Unesco World Heritage site, the Geomunoreum Lava Tube System is one of the world's most amazing and well-preserved lava networks. After passing through a dense forest, travelers will follow paths to various caves including the most famous: Manjanggul.

Discover the O'sulloc Tea Museum

Some of the best tea in the world is sourced from Jeju Island thanks to the nutrient-rich soil, optimal climate, and mountainous terrain. Travelers can get a sense of the country's historic tea culture at the ultra-modern O'sulloc Tea Museum in the Seokwang tea fields. Here you'll find a beautiful glass architecture and a plethora of activities. In addition to green tea tastings and views of the lush paddies, there's also an indoor garden, a Tea Cups of the World gallery, an interactive space for tea roasting, and a store selling beautiful ceramics and fresh brews.

Hallabong Mandarin oranges

Hike the Olle Trails

One of the most scenic and relaxing ways to explore Jeju's natural scenery is on foot, via the "olle" trails. This network of trails comprises 26 interconnected treks, the longest is about 14 miles long. The majority of the trails trace the craggy volcanic coastline, but Trail 14, on the western side of the island, ambles through the lush countryside farther inland, passing by farms, orchards, and forests.

Insider tip: One of the best times of year to explore the olle trails is in March and April when never-ending fields of gorgeous yellow canola flowers bloom.

Go for a Bike Ride on U-Do Island

Dubbed Peanut Island, U-Do is located about 15 minutes off the eastern coast of Jeju, easily accessible by ferry. The island is known for its peanut harvests, peanut ice cream sundaes, seafood hot pot, seaweed soup, and an incredible coastline — black rocky shores and turquoise waters. The easiest way to explore is by bike, though vendors near the ferry pier also rent electric bikes and quirky smart cars.

See the Haenyeo Divers

Historically, Jeju has relied on the fruits of the sea for sustenance, as it's difficult to grow certain crops on land due to the rugged terrain. The islanders developed special techniques to pluck sea urchins, octopus, squid, seaweed, and mollusks from the deep. That's where Jeju's famous haenyeo divers come in. Designated a UNESCO Intangible Cultural Heritage, these female divers don wetsuits and goggles, then plunge 20 meters into the Korean Strait without any breathing equipment — holding their breath for 3 minutes at a time.

Try Hallabong Mandarin Oranges

The island's hallabong oranges are famous for their sweet flavor and a nub at the top, which makes them super easy to peel. While they're usually sold in bulk at the markets, you can sample the flavors in the form of a freshly squeezed orange juice, available at ubiquitous stands at tourist spots around the island. If you're visiting in November, check out the Jeju Orange Festival.

Enter a Volcano at Sunrise Peak

Seongsan Ilchul-bong, also known a Sunrise Peak, is one of the island's accessible volcanoes. Though steep, the 600-foot hike only takes about 30 minutes up clear pathways and a few sets of stairs. At the top, there's a well-maintained, stadium-like viewing platform that overlooks the ocean beyond, island behind, and a giant crater in the foreground that was formed more than 5,000 years ago. Sit by the crater's ridge to take it all in; the experience continues as you descend the wooden stairs on the opposite side of the mountain, with spectacular ocean views along the way.

Line 'em up, knock 'em down

The Patriots' defensive line is bigger and better than ever. JAMES TOSCANO

Trey Flowers wrestles Atlanta quarterback Matt Ryan down to the ground in Super Bowl LI. GETTY IMAGES

There is plenty of roster turnover in the NFL on a year-to-year basis.

With the physicality of the sport, free agency, and a long training camp that aims to ensure the best 53 players out of 90 make the team, players come and go. And certainly that is the case for players on the defensive line in New England.

New England lost Chris Long and Jabaal Sheard to free agency, two defensive ends who made their mark in their short time with the Patriots.

At the start of camp, that position took an even bigger hit when Rob Ninkovich announced his retirement after eight years on the team.

So who can we expect to see putting pressure on the quarterback and clogging up the holes to stop the run?

The Patriots still have plenty of options. Opportunity knocks for a handful of young linemen that began to make the jump last season and continue to trend in the right direction. The player who represents this most is defensive end Trey Flowers.

Flowers, who is going into his third year, really got comfortable in a larger role last season after he started in Week 10 and remained a starter the rest of the way. He finished the 2016 season with 45 tackles, a team-high seven sacks, and two fumble recoveries. That success continued in the playoffs, where he started all three games, including the Super Bowl where he recorded six tackles and 2.5 sacks of Matt Ryan.

Needless to say, teams will be focusing on him more this year.

"It's something that you gotta understand that comes with a little bit of success," Flowers told WEEI. "They're going to kind of key in on you, but you gotta still be productive through that. So that's something that I'm working on in training camp. Just being able to use offensive leverages and know that I might get chipped, know that I might get double-teamed, so you gotta work through it."

Flowers heads a young defensive end unit that includes Geneo Grissom, Kony Ealy (via trade from Carolina), as well as rookies Derek Rivers and Deatrich Wise.

While Ealy had a bit of a slower start to camp, Wise made some noise. Unfortunately, Wise suffered a head injury in the team's first preseason game, so his status going forward is unclear.

Not unclear is the effect Alan Branch has had on the line in his first three seasons with the Patriots. The 11-year veteran has drawn much praise from Bill Belichick over the years and re-signed with the team over the offseason on a two-year, $12 million deal. After proving himself as one of the best interior linemen in the NFL — even at this stage in his career — it's no wonder to see the Pats re-sign him.

Alongside Branch is Malcom Brown, the Patriots' 2015 first-round pick.

New England signed former Ravens defensive lineman Lawrence Guy to a four-year deal over the offseason. The versatile Guy played in every game for Baltimore over two seasons, making 16 starts, 74 tackles, and 5.5 sacks.

The favorites
DE - Trey Flowers, Kony Ealy, Geneo Grissom, Derek Rivers, Deatrich Wise
DT – Alan Branch, Malcom Brown, Vincent Valentine, Lawrence Guy

The rest
Caleb Kidder, Keionta Davis, Woodrow Hamilton, Darius Kilgo, Josh Augusta, Adam Butler

Patriots set for Texans

The Patriots lost their preseason opener last week to the Jaguars, 31-24. This week they'll face a team they'll see in Week 3 ofthe regular season (and possibly the playoffs) in the Houston Texans (Saturday, 8 p.m., WBZ). Tom Brady is expected to see some game action — maybe a quarter or even a full half. Houston will play rookie quarterback Deshaun Watson a ton in the contest. Of note, J.J. Watt is back from injury for the Texans but is unlikely to play much in the preseason contest.

BE PATIENT, CELTICS

If the Celtics and Danny Ainge are holding out on making a monster trade, expect them to hold out for Pelicans big man Anthony Davis.

A Paul George trade was risky for the Celtics because of his expiring contract in the summer of 2018, a Kyrie Irving deal is risky for the Celtics because he plays the same position as their current star – Isaiah Thomas, but a Davis deal would fit the C's just right. The problem of course is that the Pelicans don't yet have a reason to trade Davis. That's something, however, that could change quickly if New Orleans gets off to a slow start.

The Pelicans play the Warriors, Trail Blazers, Cavaliers, Timberwolves, Raptors, Clippers, Nuggets and Thunder all within the first month of the NBA regular season.

Bleacher Report senior NBA writer Howard Beck told The Vertical's Chris Mannix last month that he believed Davis eventually winding up in Boston is entirely possible.

"It's not that far-fetched," said. "It's reasonable to think that [Davis] will want out and that his people will start pressing to get him out. If you're the Boston Celtics and you're still sitting on that cache of picks and players, you are sitting so perfectly to make that kind of deal. Arguably, given Anthony Davis' talent and his age, this should be the best package we've seen in, I don't know, decades. It should be the kind of package that blows you away. The kind of package people thought they wanted to see Boston do [in June] for Paul George or Jimmy Butler."

JUMPING FOR JENNER

This summer Blake Griffin could have gone to Oklahoma City or Boston to chase a title, instead he chose to stay in LA to chase tail.

Twice in the past week Griffin was seen with Kendall Jenner [pictured], most recently at a fancy restaurant and prior to that together in a limo. It's not exactly a surprise that Jenner is interested in Griffin's ability to rise up given her stepsisters' past with NBA players, but it is a bit of a surprise that Griffin is going the full-fledged celebrity route.

Griffin had been dating former USC women's basketball star Brynn Cameron for years. The couple have two kids together.

Expect Brynn to be the most popular sports mom in America around 2033 or so — because she also gave birth to Matt Leinart's child once upon a time as well. Mama Brynn very much has the potential to be the female LaVar Ball in a few years.

JUST WIN, BABY

It's amazing what happens when you just go out and win. Only three weeks ago, all the talk surrounding the Red Sox was regarding the Dennis Eckersley – David Price drama and how bad the offense was.

This weekend, the Sox will host the Yankees for three games at Fenway and all the focus will be on actual baseball.

Drew Pomeranz (12-4, 3.39 ERA), Chris Sale (14-4, 2.51 ERA) and Doug Fister (2-6, 5.56 ERA) will pitch for the Sox in the series.

I KNOW HOW YOU FEEL ABOUT FILS

Southern chicken sandwich lovers got all giddy when it was learned that the new Atlanta Falcons stadium — Mercedes Benz Stadium — will have a Chick-Fil-A as one of its concession stands.

The only problem?

Chick-Fil-A doesn't open on Sundays, and the Falcons only play one non-Sunday game at home this season.

Chick-Fil-A doesn't open on Sundays because its owners are like, wicked religious. You'll remember that their idiot president and COO Dan Cathy said the following about same-sex marriage a few years back:

"I think we are inviting God's judgment on our nation when we shake our fist at him and say, 'We know better than you as to what constitutes a marriage.' I pray God's mercy on our generation that has such a prideful, arrogant attitude to think that we have the audacity to define what marriage is about."

Sagittarius Don't close doors. You don't have to agree with everyone, but you do have to work alongside others if you want to get things done. Go with the flow, not against it.

Capricorn A tactful approach when dealing with your peers or handling a legal matter or settlement will encourage a resolution. Avoid excessive behavior.

Aquarius Hard work will bring results. A project you finish will open new opportunities through unexpected channels. Present and promote what you have to offer.
